What is the Active Citizenship Program?

This program is considered an important tool for probing the community before and during development interventions, where the values adopted by the community, its ideas and beliefs about the other, in addition to the skills that characterize the community, are known. In addition, it works according to an interactive principle that motivates the participants through it to work in its communities and the clarity of its vision because:

- 1 - The program enables them to engage in dialogues, implement positive social action, and work as active citizens locally and globally.
- 2 - The training program proceeds from the personal to the social and from the local to the global to help discover the channels of communication that enable us to make a positive change in society, and it also helps the participants to draw a map of their community to identify the strengths and resources that exist in addition to the things that are subject to improvement in their local environments.
- 3 - The river trip ends with the participants in preparing and presenting small development projects that enable them to actively participate through them with their local communities.

Program Learning Journey

The participants go through a river cruise that consists of four axes:

1. I: Identity and culture, through which the different identities and their own identity are recognized and their differences between individuals in societies are accepted.

2. You and I: Dialogue, where dialogue tools are identified that enable him to use them in society and through which he learns and accepts the other.
3. We/Local and Global Citizenship: where he begins by probing his community through local citizenship to move it to global citizenship.
4. Our Role as Active Citizens: the river's journey ends with the planning of community initiatives, in a way that these initiatives reinforce previous concepts.
